KALAMAZOO, Mich. -- The radioactive church has been reopened after more than 50 cases of coronavirus have been linked to the ministry. The church and its associated campus in Portage and Richland were closed after staff and students were positively screened across four different counties in the West Michigan Prayer groups that resumed on Monday and weekend services are scheduled to take place with additional precautions, but some members still don't feel it is being done enough. Executive Pastor Rick Burmeister said the church had decided to reopen it after those who had tested positive outside the quarantine period were considered to have recovered in accordance with Ministry of Health standards. Related: More than 50 cases of CORONAVIRUS that span four districts associated with the Western Michigan Church were notified of church leadership from staff and students with symptoms on Monday, October 5, and issued a statement on Friday, October 9, that all services will go by default after many radioactive employees displayed cold/flu symptoms such as symptoms and/or positive testing for COVID-19. On Friday, October 15, Chief Pastor Lee Cummings posted an update on the outbreak confirming the growing number of positive cases. He told the department that Andcher would expand the virtual service for another week as directed by the Kalamazoo County Health Department. We want to make sure that we are good neighbors and be very wise and careful. When we worship together in physical reality we can trust that those environments are taken care of, that they are healthy and that there is no risk of infecting anyone else. Li revealed that he and his wife Jin, one of the co-founders of the church, had also been tested positive for COVID-19. After a two-week virtual holiday, the church only requires masks to be worn during entry and on campus. Inside, each other bio was pulled and those attending the service from different families were asked to sit apart from each other, Burmeister said. Guests are still given a choice if You want to wear a mask but are required to wear it while serving with except worship staff who lead the prayer or song, as Burmeister said. We balance our faith with our mission with safety and health. Related: The radioactive church is expanding, opening a café in downtown KalamazooDuring monday noon prayers in downtown Kalamazoo location, and about a dozen people were inside while a live band played. The ministry's school students Melissa Speight, 18, and Zoe Whitlow, 19, said the requirements for the coronavirus were more stringent when reopened. They told MLive those attending a group prayer willingly wore masks. Some members said that they were still uncomfortable returning to personal services. Kelly Cody, 71, said he was a missionary at the Richland facility at the church. He refuses to return in person until the Ministry begins to follow the flag. Richland Church, estimated to accommodate 1,000 people, opened at half its capacity in July. Cody said he spoke with church leadership and the Ministry of Health with his concerns. Cody described the reopening of the church as misleading and inaccurate messages. He was frustrated to hear pastors invite the congregation to sing at the top of their lungs when the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention suggested suspending choirs after singing and cheering were linked to the spread of COVID-19. A recording of services on Sunday (October 4th) was posted on the Department's Richland campus on Facebook at the church and a live band performed in front of a crowd. What we were told looked like they were doing everything well. I don't think they did anything right. According to the June 15 executive order, social gatherings should be kept inside for 50 people. Indoor concert spaces have been opened to 250 and outdoor arenas have been opened to 500 people. As with other executive orders, religious institutions and places of worship are exempt from penalties associated with capacity or the mandate of the face mask. Burmeister said the masks were encouraged but not commissioned during the July reopening. Burmeister said the Church does not want excessive control of organs, and the coronary virus guidelines see a combination of community health and personal responsibility. If people want to come in and finish, they can. If they want to wear masks, they can do it. When reopened in the summer, the church engaged in contactless interactions by eliminating donation buckets and suspension cards, Burmeister said. He said the church deliberately limited the Ministry of Children to reducing attendance because the church served many young families. The pastor estimated about 20-25% of people returned. Throughout the campus of the three churches, the normal numbers of personal attendance were in the range of 4,000 prior to the Coved-19 epidemic. The Church encouraged the elderly or those with conditions to continue live-streaming services at home. Deploy service broadcasts The glittering Facebook encourages those watching at home to host viewing parties to continue worshipping together. Cody said he feels the Church's response to the epidemic is deceiving and diminishing its severity. He said he was surprised and skeptical that he had not heard of any cases of getting out of the church, so he contacted the district health department to inquire if any cases were linked to Radiant but received no answers. A few days later Cody found his suspicions were correct when MLive reported on the outbreak after getting a copy of a special listserv warning of an ongoing outbreak. He said he had not received the notification from Radint because he did not use social media. I think they were underestimating the severity of this virus, how easy it is to be infected and how it is contracted. The Michigan Health Warning Network consists of contacts from Michigan, local public health, hospitals, EMS agencies, federally qualified and rural health clinics, long-term care facilities, and emergency management. Jim Rutherford, a Kalamazoo County health official, said the public was not notified of the radioactive outbreak because the Health Department considered it contained it. Rutherford said the outbreak is known as two people, so the Department of Health often manages multiple outbreaks simultaneously. The outbreak of the radioactive church was not considered out of control because of the communication tracking work of county and church officials. Burmeister said the outbreak has increased and enhanced communication among church staff. Wellness checks in the church have also been updated. He said that in the past, a wellness test was looking for symptoms such as fever, but those who tested positive showed allergies and cold symptoms such as runny noses and sore throats.
